In this paper, we propose an automatic method to measure the reading difficulty of Japanese words. The proposed method uses a statistical transliteration framework, which was inspired by statistical machine translation research. A Dirichlet process model is used for the alignment between single kanji characters and one or more hiragana characters.

A Method to Measure the Reading Difficulty of Japanese Words

We examined accentuation patterns that appear in Japanese adaptation of French words. We argue that these patterns reflect the default accentuation of Japanese grammar: they correspond to accent patterns found in some marginal sectors of Japanese vocabulary (e.g., proper nouns) where the accent is predictable. Our Optimality Theoretic analysis defines the default accentuation as the head of a ...
